Hon'ble Minister Dr. Palanivel Thiaga Rajan then took centre stage and delivered the chief guest's address. He said, "Much of our politics today is shaped and built on differences in philosophies, values and approach, but what gets lost in that process is finding out whether any of the outcomes are fully achieved. (...) Much of our policies are bereft of data packing or thorough analysis." He added that "an institution like MIDS could add a lot of value to the right government with the right kind of mindset and connectivity at the right time of process." He said that a disconnect between intent and outcome among all levels of government was common, but it would help the government if that gap could be bridged with good and independent data such that it can help frame policies.

Dr. Kripa Ananthpur provided a Vote of Thanks at the end. A brief photo-op was arranged for the media before the session concluded with National Anthem.
